Interlock rules to come with impaired laws

Legislation. First phase of new laws will come into effect July 1

Drivers convicted under Alberta's incoming impaired-driving legislation could be forced to deal with the repercussions for years.

That's because the province announced as part of a rollout of the new laws, which many members of the legal community have deemed the toughest in Canada, guilty drivers will be forced to partake in an interlock program.

Interlock devices require a driver to provide a clean breath sample through a dashboard device before gaining the ability to turn the ignition.

"The interlock device in other jurisdictions has been a proven way to change behaviours," Alberta Transportation Minister Ric McIver said Tuesday.

Mandatory interlock use will be required for a year following a first conviction, three years following a second and five years following a third. Drivers involved with the program will fork out approximately $1,300 annually to use the devices as well.

This all comes on top of indefinite licence suspensions for those who provide a blood-alcohol sample over .08 and three-day vehicle seizures for .05 blood-alcohol violations.

Calgarian Akash Brar believes the new interlock requirement is a good move. His brother, 20-year-old Arsh Brar, was killed in a collision involving an allegedly impaired driver in January.

"It's a safer system," Brar said. "With Checkstops, it's not only the people in one area, this would cover everyone."

More information about the new legislation is available at knowthelimits.ca.

Foothills. Resident calls illegal dumping 'rural version of graffiti'

Foothills resident Doug Fraser is tired of seeing his beloved countryside being treated as a dumping site for unwanted appliances and garbage.

Foothills municipality landfill manager John Deagle, who deals with roadside cleanups on a regular basis, said that in some cases it is clear that Calgarians are responsible for the garbage debris along the country roads.

Information found within the trash, such as papers with emergency contact numbers, their names and even prescriptions, identifies the culprits, said Deagle.

But without witnesses, Fraser said many culprits walk away without so much as a fine despite personal belonging revealing their illegal dumping activity. "In my opinion it is the rural version of graffiti," he laments.

In the wake of recent garbage finds, Fraser said he is willing to push the issue all the way to the provincial level to get higher fines and penalties implemented for illegal dumping. He believes this will discourage those who dump from using rural ditches and encourage them to use the city landfills.

Deagle agrees that roadside dumping is a major issue for the city. Having received four complaints on Monday morning alone, he said it's the municipal district that gets saddled with the cleanup bill.

Foothills Coun. Barb Castell said steps must be taken to discourage "disrespectful" garbage dumping, even requesting council to implement a reporting-reward system similar to Crime Stoppers.

Government '99% confident' in Mexico-beating conviction

Court. Prosecution wraps after submitting new evidence in attack on Calgary's Sheila Nabb

jeremy.nola@metronews.ca

Prosecutors have wrapped their case in the violent beating of a Calgary woman at a Mexican resort and say the fact the accused has not been freed is proof he's guilty.

Calgarian Sheila Nabb, 37, was found lying naked in a pool of her own blood inside an elevator at the Hotel Riu Emerald in Mazatlan in January.

Days after the attack, area resident Jose Ramon Acosta Quintero, 38, was arrested and charged with attempted murder.

"This is a shut case as far as we are concerned," Frank Cordova, secretary of state for Sinaloa state, which includes Mazatlan, told Metro. "I am 99 per cent confident in a conviction."

Unlike typical court proceedings in Canada, Cordova said all evidence is delivered to a judge through written submissions — there is no formal trial. This process recently wrapped on the prosecution's end and Cordova accused Quintero's defence lawyers of "delay tactics" that are stalling what he calls an inevitable verdict.

"He (Quintero) is still in prison at this point and that means we will get a conviction, if not attempted murder, at least assault and battery," Cordova said. "In my 20-year career, I have only seen one or two cases overturned at this point."

The secretary also alluded to additional evidence obtained in the weeks following the beating, which he claims included articles of Quintero's clothing that were covered in Nabb's blood.

The victim, who has returned to Calgary to continue her recovery, also submitted written testimony claiming Quintero has "similar characteristics" to her attacker, but that she could not definitively identify him, Cordova said.

Follow Jeremy Nola on Twitter @Metro_Nola

The accused

- Requests by Metro for an interview with Quintero, who initially admitted to the beating but later claimed he was coerced into a confession, were declined and attempts to contact his legal representation were unsuccessful.
- If convicted of attempted murder, Quintero could be sentenced to 12 years in jail and would likely serve eight, Cordova said.

After more than a century, a small box filled with artifacts by people with big dreams once again saw the light of day at the Alberta legislature as a time capsule was unearthed Monday.

The time capsule was buried in October 1909 under the east cornerstone of the legislature.

"Today's unearthing of a little piece of history may seem small, but its true magnitude is revealed when we consider that it (was) placed by those who could only dream of what we have become today," said Heather Klimchuk, Alberta's minister of culture.

The time capsule will be opened during the official centenary celebrations on Sept. 2, said Hon. Gene Zwozdesky, Speaker of the legislative assembly.

Until that date, the capsule will be displayed in the legislature rotunda, where Albertans will have an opportunity to guess the contents and voice their opinions on what should be placed in the next time capsule, to be buried for 100 more years.

Cities, province commit to charter talks

With signatures on the dotted line, the province and city officials from Edmonton and Calgary have committed to talks about the roles each government should play.

Minister of Municipal Affairs Doug Griffiths, along with Edmonton Mayor Stephen Mandel and Calgary alderman Jim Stevenson, signed a memorandum of understanding Monday committing to discussing city charters.

"Moving from 3.8 million people to 4.8 million people over the period of a decade creates incredible challenges but it also creates incredible opportunities," said Griffiths.

"It's not just the Province of Alberta that has challenges in adapting to the growth, it's many of our municipalities"

Ald. Jim Stevenson, filling in for Mayor Naheed Nenshi, who was absent due to the recent death of his father, reiterated that which Nenshi has long advocated.

"This is the first step but it's a very, very important step that we have agreed that we need to talk about roles and responsibilities," said Stevenson.

Mandel said there are several issues cities need to discuss with the province including policing and growth.

"I think it's a bellwether day because our province is trying to find a way to work with us to come up with solutions to some of the major problems we face"

Griffiths said there's a possibility efficiencies will be found in service delivery when more clear roles are defined as to which level of government is responsible for what services.

KATIE TURNER/METRO

City-charter talks

- The first stage of the discussions will be completed by September, where issues will be identified.
- Between October 2012 and February 2013, solutions will be developed.
- The agreement will be presented for consideration in the spring of 2013.

Alert. Police continue investigations into two separate sexual assaults

Details are limited as Calgary police continue their investigation of two separate sexual assaults that occurred in the early hours of Sunday morning.

At around 2 a.m. Sunday, a 26-year-old woman was sexually assaulted by a man not known to her, along 17 Avenue Southeast near Deerfoot Trail.

The suspect is described as Caucasian, six feet tall with a slim build and with either a bald head or short brown hair. At the time of the offence, he was wearing a grey shirt and dark pants, police said.

In another incident, a 22-year-old woman was found sexually assaulted near an apartment building in the 3300 block of Rideau Place Southwest.

According to Calgary Police Services, there have been a total of 243 sexual assaults reported since January. Of the incidents reported, 10 (approximately four per cent) were attacks in which the victim and the suspect were considered strangers.

Police are urging Calgarians to be vigilant when out alone by avoiding dark deserted places, being aware of their surroundings and always letting someone else know where they're going.

Anyone with information is asked to call police or Crime Stoppers.

Spreading disease. Whooping cough outbreak hits southern Alberta

An outbreak of the whooping cough in southern Alberta has health officials trying to contain the illness.

Thirty-six cases have been reported in roughly five and a half months, according to Dr. Vivien Suttorp, medical officer for health zone south.

But she believes it's under-reported due to the differences in symptoms.

"So those individuals are spreading the disease in the community but may not be a 'case' because they may not seek medical attention," she said.

Medicine Hat, Taber area,

The accused in a triple murder could be back in Edmonton as soon as Wednesday, as investigators have wrapped up initial interviews with him in Langley, B.C.

Carnage

"Our investigators have described the scene as one of unimaginable carnage."

EPS police Chief Rod Knecht

"I can tell you that Travis Baumgartner is co-operating with our investigators and, based on this, we're completing numerous investigative tasks," Supt. Bob Hassel, of EPS' Criminal Investigative Division, said Monday.

A "thorough forensic examination" of Baumgartner's truck is done, said

Hassel, though police have not recovered his company-issued gun or body armour.

Baumgartner, 21, was detained Saturday while attempting to cross into the U.S. with approximately $330,000.

He faces eight charges in a shooting at the University of Alberta's HUB Mall

Friday that left three fellow armoured-car guards dead and another in critical condition.

"I cannot begin to describe the shock and grief the G4S family is still feeling after the tragic event Friday," said G4S Canada president and CEO Jean Tallion.

G4S has brought in security experts for an internal look and will make any necessary changes, said Tallion.

No more marijuana at 30,000 feet.

That's the message from Calgary airline WestJet, which has clarified its stance on a device used aboard one of its flights last year by a group of local chronic pain sufferers.

"It has to do with how hot it (the device) gets," explained medicinal-marijuana user Lisa Kirkman, who was one of four people believed to be the first to smoke marijuana aboard a Canadian flight. "There is fear about that inside an airplane obviously... I understand."

Marijuana users are still able to use vaporizers — which produce little, if any, smoke, and no odour — in airport lobbies and can bring the devices aboard planes.

A WestJet spokesperson confirmed the airline's

Cowboy assures horse's health

When long riders plan an extensive trek on horseback, the primary concern is not their own comfort but the health and welfare of the horses they are relying on, said a man about to embark on a nearly two-year journey.

Filipe Leite said the truth about any long ride is that a healthy horse will ensure the safety and health of the rider.

"There are so many people out there who think that what I am doing is bad for them, but really it's not," said

Leite, who is planning a long ride from Calgary to Brazil. "We live in the 21st century, and not too long ago we used horses for nearly everything. They got us from point A to point B."

Leite's journey will cover 16,000 kilometres, and he says that he recognizes that the success of his trip is completely dependant on the health of his horses.

"My route is being drawn out with the horses' health in mind. We only ride four to five days a week and only 30 kilometres a day," he said.

According to Veterinary Clinical Pharmacology professor, vet and accomplished endurance rider Trish Dowling, long rides like this are what horses are meant to do.

"People tend to anthropomorphize," said Dowling. "Many people underestimate the athletic capabilities of a horse. There is no humane issue here; this is really what they're designed to do."

Alleged killer Magnotta returns to face justice

Body-parts case. Suspect arrives in Quebec, where he's expected to be charged with first-degree murder

Luka Rocco Magnotta, the lone suspect in a brutal Montreal killing that made headlines around the world, is back home to face justice on Canadian soil.

Magnotta landed aboard a military plane that took off from Germany, where the 29-year-old was arrested earlier this month following an international manhunt, and he arrived at Mirabel airport near Montreal Monday evening.

He arrived under a wall of security.

A convoy of emergency vehicles, with flashing lights, rolled out to meet Magnotta. A half-dozen men escorted him down the stairs off the plane, onto the tarmac, and into a minivan in the convoy. Standing nearby were armed guards, at least one carrying an assault weapon. Magnotta was being restrained on the plane, federal sources said. His fellow passengers on the military transport aircraft included officials and law enforcement from Canada and Germany, those sources added.

Right to die. Woman hails court ruling in her favour

Gloria Taylor says she's happy that she can now have the option to "die with dignity," but she still hopes to live a long life.

The 64-year-old West Kelowna, B.C., woman, who suffers from Lou Gehrig's disease, spoke publicly for the first time Monday since her landmark B.C. Supreme Court case that saw laws banning doctor-assisted suicide in this country deemed unconstitutional and discriminatory.

"It took a long time, and now, finally, we have emerged from the Dark Ages to realize that dying is a part of living," Taylor said.

Justice Lynn Smith suspended her ruling for one year to allow Parliament time to make its next move, but granted an exemption that allows Taylor to seek doctor-assisted death during that period.

"(People) want to die peacefully," Taylor said, "not screaming in pain and not with the government in their bedroom."

Taylor said her condition has deteriorated to the point where she is losing her voice, needs a feeding tube and is restricted to her wheelchair, but she's made no decisions on when she'll contact a doctor and is living her life "one day at a time."

Tory budget implementation bill passes House of Commons

The Conservative majority has passed the government's sprawling budget implementation bill following a final evening of debate.

The vote in the House of Commons sends the 400-plus-page piece of legislation on to the Senate, where it will become law before the end of the week. The bill has been described by its detractors as a "kitchen sink" due to its massive grab-bag of measures.

Man with no legs climbs Kilimanjaro

Redefine possible.
Spencer West climbs Africa's tallest and most famous mountain

ELISHA DACEY

An American man who challenged tens of thousands of Canadian teens to redefine their possible last year has done the same thing for himself.

Spencer West, who lost both his legs due to a genetic disorder when he was five and walks using his hands, reached the summit of Mount Kilimanjaro on Monday.

"It's dark right now, but the view was spectacular," said West, speaking to Metro from the top of the mountain by satellite phone.

Seven day climb

West has helped raise more than $500,000 for Free the Children during the climb. It will take about two days to get back base camp.

- He spent 80 per cent of the climb walking on his hands; the rest in his chair or strapped to a team member's back.

"We're exhausted right now and I'm sure once we're rested I'll be able to talk about things in a more inspiring way," he joked.

West is a motivational speaker with Me to We, part of Free the Children, a Canadian charity that fights for the rights of children around the world. Last year, he participated in We Day, a day of stories, music and speeches that empowers teenagers.

Chilliwack, B.C. Hang-gliding pilot to be tried in April on obstruction-of-justice charge

A hang-gliding pilot will stand trial next year in connection with the death of a woman who plunged to her death over the Fraser Valley in April.

William Jon Orders appeared in Chilliwack court on Monday, and his court date has been set for next April 15th.

He is charged with obstructing justice.

Lenami Godinez-Avila plunged 300 metres from the tandem hang glider Orders was flying.

Police have accused William Jonathan Orders of swallowing a memory card from his hang-glider's camera after Godinez-Avila fell to her death.

The victim, 27, was taking the tandem hang-gliding trip as a celebration of her second-year anniversary with her boyfriend.

In May, Orders made a public apology to the woman's family and friends for the incident, saying he "panicked" in the moments after the accident.

When Orders set out to take the young woman soaring through the skies over scenic British Columbia, his goal was to give her an "amazing adventure" and "lots of smiles."

Instead the 50-year-old acknowledged last month that he "failed in a major way."

"I want so much to relieve that day and to have it turn out differently," he said of the accident in a statement obtained recently by The Canadian Press.

Media and devil fuelling Vatileaks scandal: Cardinal

Holy See. Vatican Secretary of State, Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone critical of journalism on leaked documents

Devil at play

"The truth is that there's a will to create division that comes from the devil."

Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone

The Vatican's No. 2 official on Monday blamed the media — and the devil — for fuelling the scandal over leaked Vatican documents.

Secretary of State Cardinal Tarcisio Bertone told an Italian Catholic weekly that journalists reporting on the leaks scandal are "pretending to be Dan Brown ... inventing stories and replaying legends."

The reference to Brown is particularly acute; Brown wrote The Da Vinci Code and Angels and Demons, the best-selling fictional accounts of power struggles and scandals inside the Catholic Church.

The Vatican has been on the defensive ever since sensitive documents alleging corruption and exposing power struggles began appearing in the Italian media in January.

A recent book containing dozens of documents from Pope Benedict XVI's own desk has compounded what many see as a plot to undermine Cardinal Bertone's authority.

Several top Vatican officials have castigated the media for fuelling the scandal, and, to be sure, Italian newspapers in particular have been on a feeding frenzy reporting details of the Vatican's investigation into the leaks that the Vatican spokesman routinely shoots down.

Pope Benedict XVI himself has complained about media reports that "went well beyond the facts, offering an image of the Holy See that doesn't correspond to reality." Bertone's interview took the complaints to a new level, blasting the "vehemence" of some Italian newspapers.

Bertone admitted the Holy See isn't perfect and that "none of us wants to hide the church's shadows and defects."

But he said the Italian media in particular had gone too far, violating the privacy rights of both the pope and the people who correspond with him.

Islamist claims win in Egypt's presidential election

Egyptian supporters of Islamist candidate Mohammed Morsi chant slogans as they celebrate his apparent victory in Tahrir Square, Cairo, on Monday.

Election. Egyptian military moves to retain power, undermining victory claimed by Mohammed Morsi

Islamist candidate Mohammed Morsi declared victory Monday in Egypt's first free presidential election since Hosni Mubarak's ouster 16 months ago. But just as polls were closing, the ruling military council issued constitutional amendments that gave sweeping authority to maintain its grip on power and subordinate the nominal head of state.

After the last-minute power grab Sunday night, the ruling Supreme Council of the Armed Forces (SCAF) pledged Monday to honour its promise to hand over power to the newly elected president by the end of this month. But the constitutional amendments stripped the president of almost all significant powers. The military decreed that it will have legislative authority after a court dissolved parliament, it will control the drafting of a new constitution and will not allow civilian oversight of its sig-

U.S. reaction

In Washington, Pentagon spokesman George Little urged the ruling military to transfer full power to a democratically elected civilian government, as it pledged to do in the past.

Morsi represents the Muslim Brotherhood, an Islamic fundamentalist group that has emerged as the most powerful political faction since the uprising. The Brotherhood's Freedom and Justice Party rejected the constitutional declaration, saying it was no longer within the authority of the military council to issue such a decree with less than two weeks left for the transfer of power.

Gunfight. Militants burst across Israeli border, kill 1

Militants crossed from Egypt's turbulent Sinai desert into southern Israel on Monday and opened fire, killing an Israeli worker, defence officials said. Two assailants were shot dead in a gunbattle with Israeli troops responding to the ambush.

The Israeli was in a crew building a fence along the porous desert border.

No group claimed responsibility for the attack, which underscored the growing lawlessness in the Sinai desert since longtime Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak was toppled by a popular uprising last year.

Several hours after the attack, an Israeli airstrike killed two men on a motorcycle in the northern Gaza Strip near the Israeli border. The Islamic Jihad said the men were members on a "reconnaissance" mission and vowed revenge.

Syria

Russia concerned for citizens, base

Syrian forces shelled the central city of Homs on Monday during a fierce offensive to root out rebels as the country's most important ally, Russia, appeared to show growing concern over President Bashar Assad's future.

Russia's Interfax news agency reported that two Russian navy ships are prepared to head to Syria to protect Russian citizens and a naval base there.

"We won't abandon the Russians and will evacuate them from the conflict zone, if necessary," Maj-Gen. Vladimir Gradusov was quoted as saying. Each ship is capable of carrying up to 300 marines and a dozen tanks, according to Russian media reports.

That would make it the largest known Russian troop deployment to Syria, signalling that Moscow is becoming increasingly uneasy about Syria's slide toward civil war.

The latest winner of Zimbabwe's Mr. Ugly pageant has ambitions of fame and fortune. But, so far, he remains a simple market porter.

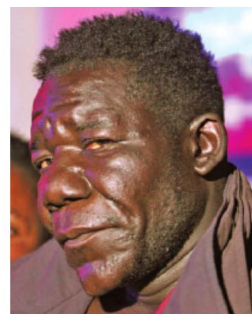

William Masvinu, 38, who won the second edition of the pageant last month, makes his living carrying loads for shoppers in a market in the impoverished western Har-

"I was expecting to do some adverts and some modelling if I was asked. But I'm still poor, still carrying loads of cabbages onto buses," he said. "I am ready to show the world my gift. Being ugly is not a curse. It's a gift God gave me and I'm proud of it. My face makes me special and I am not making any excuses about it."

Organizers say they started the pageant as a novel way to entertain audiences.

Ex-suspect sues over travel insurance claim

$3.5M. Man held for months in Aruban jail after travelling companion vanished says AMEX has 'duty' to pay death benefit

An American who was suspected in the presumed death of his travelling companion in Aruba is suing to collect on a travel insurance policy issued in the woman's name.

Gary Giordano says in a lawsuit that AMEX Assurance Company is required to pay him $3.5 million under the terms of a policy purchased before last summer's trip. He says in the suit that his companion, Robyn Gardner, is presumed dead following her Aug. 2 disappearance and that the insurance company has a "duty to pay the full death benefit" to him.

Giordano was held for months in an Aruban jail on suspicion of being involved in Gardner's disappearance, and the insurance policy's existence had caught the attention of investigators. But an Aruban judge ordered him released in November, saying prosecutors didn't have enough evidence to continue holding him. Giordano has denied wrongdoing and says Gardner was swept out to sea as the two snorkelled, though her friends and family have expressed doubt about that statement.

He says in the lawsuit that Gardner was covered under a July 27 policy that afforded $3.5 million in benefits in the event of accidental death or dismemberment. Giordano said the lawsuit speaks for itself and declined further comment.

Ukraine on Monday defied Western pressure to end the prosecution of the imprisoned former Prime Minister Yulia Tymoshenko, with a top prosecutor saying she will be charged in connection with a murder from 16 years ago.

Doctors protest refugee health-care cuts

Services end June 30.
Feds' program puts new immigrants at risk, health-care professionals say

Doctors threw on their white coats Monday and rushed to Parliament Hill, which they say is the scene for the start of a national medical emergency: Deteriorating refugee health.

Hundreds of medical professionals are protesting government cuts to the interim federal health program, which provides extended health-care benefits to people while they await having their refugee status approved.

"We are launching into an uncontrolled, disastrous human-health experience by arbitrarily denying life-saving medical care to some of the most vulnerable and traumatized people in the whole world," said Dr. Mark Tyndall, the head of infectious diseases at the Ottawa hospital during a passionate news conference.

"And for what? Further isolation and suffering, the spread of infectious diseases, increased wait times at our hospital emergency departments. Canada is way better than this."

Protests were held across the country in response to the cuts, which were announced by the government in April.

The benefits include prescription drugs and vision and dental care and will expire on June 30.

Most will only receive only urgent or essential care.

Those whose refugee claims are rejected, or who come from countries deemed safe by the federal government, will only be treated if they pose a threat to public health.

For both categories, medications will be paid for only if they treat or prevent a public-health issue.

A committee in the Immigration department will determine which services meet the definition of treating or preventing public-health risks.

The Conservatives argue the extended benefits are better than those received by most Canadians.

"These families will have the same coverage as regular, tax-paying Canadian families," Immigration Minister Jason Kenney said.

"They get an open work permit from which they make income to help pay for any additional things like dental, eye care or supplementary pharmaceuticals."

Doctor Nora McBean of the South East Ottawa Community Centre joins fellow protesters as they rally on Parliament Hill in Ottawa Monday regarding planned cuts to the refugee medical program. SEAN KILPATRICK/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Bottom line vs. vulnerability

- The government estimates that the cuts will save about $20 million a year for the next five years.
- Critics argue that the cuts fail to take into account the fact that refugees arrive in Canada suffering from the ill effects of malnutrition, violence and, in some cases, torture, and require sustained medical assistance they can't afford on their own.

Jinny Sims, the NDP's immigration critic, said there are some Canadians who do receive the benefits set to be denied to refugees — those on social assistance or disability programs.

Sims said refugees should be considered akin to those Canadians.

"It once again goes back to how are we going to treat the most vulnerable," she said.

"Nobody is really out there saying that the refugees who arrive get health-care benefits people who are on social assistance don't get."

But Kenney said resettled refugees get income support, free integration services and job-search programs, all of which the government is increasing. He also said there is a network of non-profit groups who also help.

"There's quite an array of public services available to people," he said.

The Conservatives also argue good health-care benefits attract bogus refugee claims, and those people are able to take advantage while they wait for their claims to be processed.

Tyndall said the government is playing politics.

"Canadians are smarter than this. This is an attack on our entire health-care system."

Autopsy results in Rodney King drowning will take several weeks

Cause of death. Tests will show whether King, who had struggled with addiction, had drugs or alcohol in his system

Investigators conducted an autopsy Monday on Rodney King's body, but it is expected to take several weeks to determine what killed the man who became famous after he was severely beaten by Los Angeles police in 1991, officials said.

Coroner's officials will await results from toxicology tests that could take up to six weeks to gather before determining how the 47-year-old King died. He was pulled from the deep end of his pool early Sunday morning by police who were called to his home by his fiancée.

King's beating was captured on videotape and broadcast worldwide, as were photos of his bloodied and bruised face.

The more than 50 baton blows and kicks inflicted by officers left King with 11 skull fractures, a broken eye socket and facial nerve damage.

The trial of four officers charged with felony assault in connection with the case ended after a jury with no black members acquitted three of the officers on state charges in the beating; a mistrial was declared for a fourth.

The verdict sparked one of the most costly and deadly race riots in the nation's history.

Rialto police were investigating King's death as an apparent drowning and said they have found no signs of foul play. King's fiancée spoke with police for several hours Sunday and is considered a witness in the case, Rialto Police Officer David Shepherd said Monday.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ongoing investigation

- A police officer remained stationed outside of King's one-story home throughout the day Monday, with several news crews also remaining in the neighbourhood. Cars slowed to look at the house and some stopped for passengers to snap photos, but no memorial to King had been created at the residence.
- Toxicology results will show whether King, who struggled with addiction throughout his life, had any alcohol or drugs in his system.
- Police have said there were no signs of alcohol or drug paraphernalia near the pool. Officers were seen taking a marijuana plant out of the house Sunday.

Ottawa rebukes UN over Quebec's Bill 78

Human rights.
Conservatives defend province's right to legislate protests

The Charest Liberals and Harper Conservatives formed a united front Monday in condemning a United Nations agency for its criticism of Quebec's controversial Bill 78.

The latest spat, the second in recent weeks between the federal government and a branch of the UN, also sparked debate over who is responsible for the growing divide between Canada and the world body.

United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights

Navi Pillay said Monday she found the controversial Quebec law to be part of an alarming trend.

The law sets rules for gatherings of more than 50 people, requiring organizers to provide eight hours' notice of the itinerary and length of the event.

Pillay expressed her opinion of the Quebec law in a single paragraph of a long speech in Geneva during which she lamented rights violations in places such as North Korea, Zimbabwe and South Sudan.

"Moves to restrict freedom of assembly in many parts of the world are alarming," she said.

"In the context of student protests, I am disappointed

Canada's loss

- The NDP's foreign affairs critic Paul Dewar said Monday the latest clash between the Tories and the UN was part of a "dangerous trajectory" that dates back to Canada's historic failure to win a temporary two-year term on the powerful security council two years ago.

by the new legislation passed in Quebec that restricts their rights to freedom of association and of peaceful assembly." Quebec Premier Jean Charest called it rich that the criticism came from an agency based in Geneva, a city with its own much tougher protest laws.

"It's ironic ... that they're criticizing a law that requires eight hours' notice before a protest and an itinerary, when in Geneva — where the United Nations office is — it's 30 days' notice that they require," Charest told reporters at the global environmental conference in Rio de Janeiro.

"So we're not as severe as the place that hosts the United Nations. We're more supple, and more permissive."

Industry Minister Christian Paradis, the government's Quebec lieutenant, took Pillay to task for avoiding other, more serious human rights abuses in places such as Sri Lanka, Iran and Belarus.

Foreign Affairs Minister John Baird also said he was disappointed Pillay mentioned Canada.

"Quebec is a very democratic place, subject to the rule of law," Baird said. "People can challenge the government's decisions in court so I stand behind the government of Quebec. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Canada eyes entry in trade talks as G20 summit ends

Making the grade?
Rumours abound that Canada will be allowed to join Trans-Pacific Partnership talks

Mexico's inclusion in a round of major trade talks may bode well for Canada's own hopes of getting a seat at the negotiating table.

But Prime Minister Stephen Harper played coy Monday when asked if his government will be asked to pull up a chair — possibly by the summit's end on Tuesday.

"We're delighted that Americans and others have indicated an interest in seeing Canada join the Trans-Pacific Partnership," Harper said. "I think for now I'll just leave it at that."

Rumours and chatter abound at the G20 summit in the Mexican oceanside resort of Los Cabos that Canada will be allowed to join the negotiations on Trans-Pacific Partnership, a deal many believe will have more economic strength than the North American Free Trade Agreement.

The governing Conservatives have been lobbying the Obama administration for months to grant Canada admission to the talks.

Harper even dispatched his trade minister, Ed Fast, around the globe to drum up support for a seat at the table.

The Globe and Mail reported that no less than the prime minister's own chief of staff, former Bay Street executive Nigel Wright, has taken the lead on the file, which the newspaper says irked some members of the Conservative cabinet — although Fast's office says the minister didn't feel slighted — but giving a clear indication of the importance Harper puts on the trade talks.

Some analysts interpreted the inclusion of only Mexico in the negotiations as a rebuke. But it may well be that since Mexico is hosting this week's G20 summit, it would be asked to the talks before Canada or Japan, which has also been vying to get in. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Economic crisis

Eurozone struggles to find fixes

Greece's election result has eased fears of imminent financial disaster for Europe, but the continent's leaders are still searching for a way to contain a debt crisis that threatens the global economy.

Europe is struggling to put out several fires, not just the one in Greece. Heavily indebted Spain and Italy are saw their borrowing costs rise Monday, increasing pressure on their government finances and keeping alive fears that another big bailout might be needed.

The eurozone's challenges run deep. The economy is expected to shrink this year, with the so-called peripheral countries like Greece and Spain in painful recession. Many of its banks remain on life support, propped up by emergency credit. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

StatsCan. Despite economic growth, family incomes remain stagnant: Report

The growing economy hasn't done very much to boost Canadian incomes, a new report from Statistics Canada confirms.

The agency reported Monday that median, after-tax income for families of two or more amounted to $65,500 in 2010, virtually unchanged from 2009 or the year before after adjusting for inflation.

The result was slightly better for two-parent families with children. That segment saw median, after-tax income grow to $78,800 from $77,200 the year before.

There was no data from 2011, but weekly wages and other income reports suggest that there would likely be little improvement last year as well, analysts said.

The latest reading follows a report last week that showed average household debt in relation to disposable income had risen to a record 152 per cent at the end of 2011. Statistics Canada noted that the rise in the debt ratio was not due to Canadians borrowing more, but to stagnant incomes.

Microsoft unveils new tablet computer, Surface

Competitive edge.

Decision to make its own tablet a departure for the company, which usually focuses on software

Microsoft has unveiled Surface, a tablet computer to compete with Apple's iPad.

CEO Steve Ballmer was on hand to announce the new tablet, calling it part of a "whole new family of devices" the company is developing.

One version of the device, which won't go on sale until sometime in the fall, is 9.3 millimetres thick and works on the Windows RT operating system. It comes with a kickstand to hold it upright and a touch keyboard cover that snaps on using magnets.

The device weighs under 1.5 pounds and will cost about as much as other tablet computers. Its debut is set to coincide with the upcoming fall release of Microsoft's much-anticipated Windows 8 operating system.

ating system.

Steven Sinofsky, president of Microsoft's Windows division, called the device a "tablet that's a great PC — a PC that's a great tablet."

A slightly thicker version — still less than 14 millimetres thick and under two pounds — will work on Microsoft's upcoming Windows 8 Pro operating system and cost as much as an Ultrabook, the company said.

The pro version comes with a stylus that allows users to make handwritten notes on documents such as PDF files.

Microsoft has been making software for tablets since 2002, when it shipped the Windows XP Tablet PC Edition. Many big PC makers produced tablets that ran the software, but they were never big sellers. The tablets were based on PC technology, and were heavy, with short battery lives.

Microsoft didn't say how long the Surface would last on battery power.

Microsoft's decision to make its own tablet is a departure from the software maker's strategy. With personal computers, Microsoft was content to leave the design and marketing of the hardware to other companies that licensed the Windows operating system and other software applications.

Whatever Microsoft's motives, the company's tablet plans risk alienating some of its longtime partners in the PC industry.

VALIDATING OUR LIVES THROUGH THE LENS

SHE SAYS...
Jessica Napier
metronews.ca/shesays

I recently went on a holiday to the sun-soaked Greek island of Santorini. We'll call it a working vacation since I was on bridesmaid duty for my best friend's wedding. Needless to say, it was phenomenal. The picturesque surroundings and memorable milestones warranted countless photo opportunities.

While away, I found myself capitalizing on any opportunity for free Wi-Fi so that I could go online to post real-time updates and digital snapshots for my friends and followers back home. Because if you don't record it, upload it, share it and tweet it — did it even really happen? Nobody asked me about my trip when I returned; they had seen it all thanks to my jealousy-inducing stream of Instagram activity.

When I was younger, I used to pore over my mother's photo albums filled with weathered snapshots of her on beaches and in fields looking perfectly dishevelled, dressed in her 1970s hippie garb. The photos are rinsed in sepia tones, the images are grainy, the edges blurred.

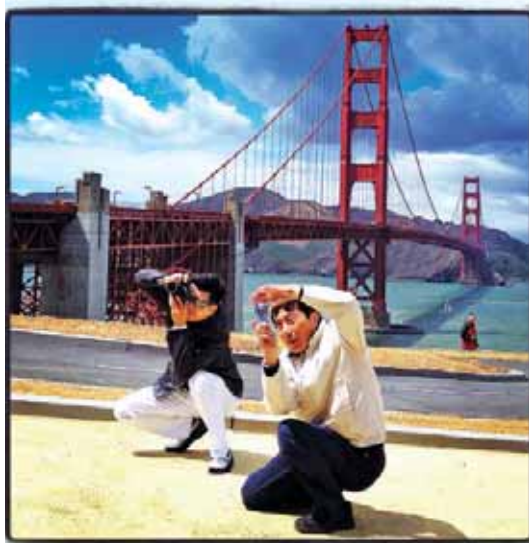

Thanks to apps like Instagram and Hipstamatic, I have thousands of faux-analogue images with those same qualities but without any of the authenticity. Flaws and colour saturations that were once accidental have been applied so meticulously in order to make the perfect imperfect image.

Today, our mundane realities are manipulated, elevated and given a veneer of artistry with a strategically applied "Valencia" filter. For anyone who has ever wanted to experience a false sense of nostalgia for a time before they were even born, there is indeed an app for that.

Outside the smartphone realm, Urban Outfitters has reintroduced Lomography and Holga cameras to the masses, creating an entire cottage industry by selling an idealized retro aesthetic to a new generation of shutterbugs. Except, this time around, those prints aren't treasured keepsakes stored in leather-bound albums; they're digitized, categorized, Tumbled and hashtagged until they become something else entirely.

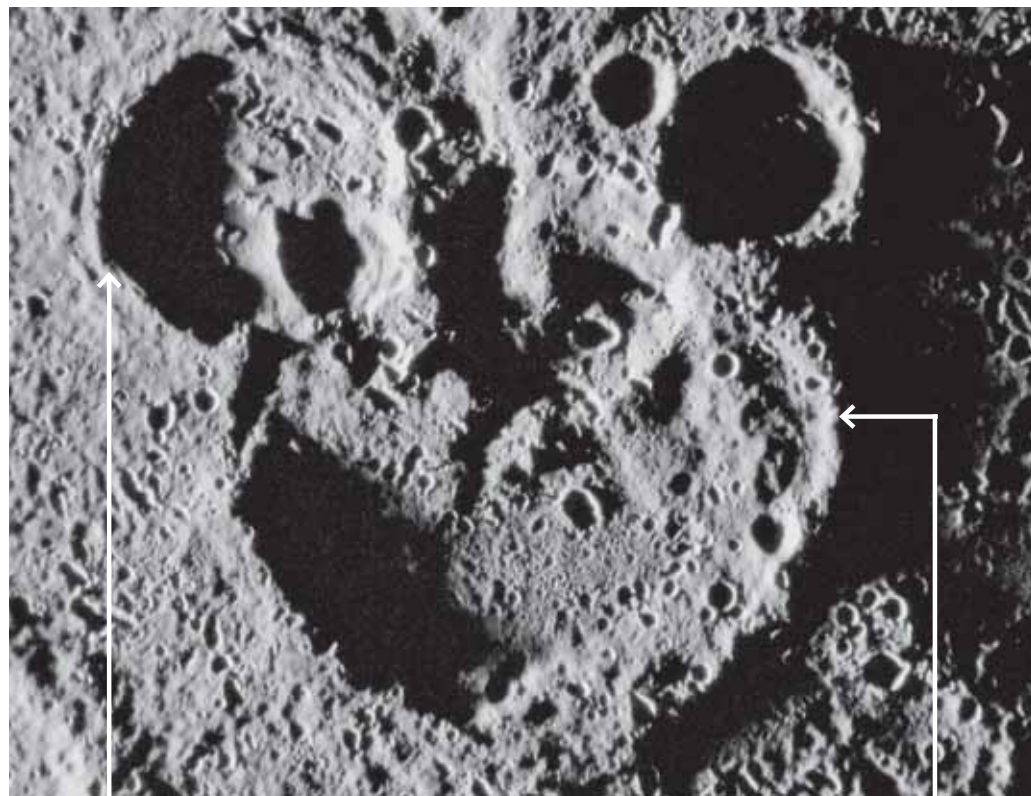

All photographs are inauthentic in a way. By capturing an instant in time, the boundaries of those realities are cropped, the subjects' poses suggesting acute awareness of their being snapped. The very act of taking photographs makes experiences staged and, in turn, less real.

While I delight in the preservation of memories, I believe in the importance of leaving the camera (and the iPhone) at home sometimes, even when you're on vacation. We need to remind ourselves to be fully present in our unfiltered realities, to enjoy the fleetingness of life and to let our memories be all that we take away.

Big celeb found on small planet

It looks like Mickey Mouse has made a big impact on planet Mercury.

But, in truth, the familiar silhouette is a group of craters in Mercury's southern hemisphere.

The image was taken by NASA's Messenger orbiter spacecraft, which is gathering photographic data about the solar system's innermost planet.

Jack Osbourne facing MS

New father Jack Osbourne is facing a diagnosis of multiple sclerosis. The former reality star and son of Ozzy and Sharon Osbourne revealed his health crisis in an interview with People, released Sunday. He told the magazine he was angry and frustrated when he found out, and he's concerned about his family. Osbourne and his fiancée Lisa Stelly had daughter Pearl in April. Multiple sclerosis attacks the brain and spinal cord, and can cause somewhat mild problems or serious disability, such as paralysis. Jack Osbourne gained fame as a teen when his heavy metal father and his mother allowed the family to be profiled in the MTV reality show The Osbournes.

Big Miracle

Director. Ken Kwapis

Stars. Drew Barrymore, John Krasinski, Kristen Bell

Big Miracle fictionalizes the details in its telling of the 1988 effort by residents, the U.S. military and two global superpowers to rescue three whales trapped in Arctic ice. Drew Barrymore plays shrill activist Rachel Kramer, who often alienates the people she needs to win over. That includes her ex-boyfriend, Adam Carlson (John Krasinski), who is an ambitious small-time TV reporter. His reports bring Kramer and a horde of other media types, as well as local Inupiat hunters. The best characters are the whales, animatronic behemoths that look incredibly real. They're the centrepiece of this feel-good comic tale that works its way to an exciting conclusion. PETER HOWELL

Project X

Director. Nima Nourizadeh

Stars. Thomas Mann, Oliver Cooper

Project X is actually a slag heap of similar films, spanning the booger-flicking expanse from Animal House to Superbad. The difference here is the way Project X so aggressively ups the ante for outrageous sex, drugs and property damage. The film reflects so poorly on American life and values, it could serve as an Al Qaeda training video. The setup is simple: shy Thomas is turning 17, and his best buds want to throw the mother of all parties at Tom's house. Mom and dad's place is trashed so badly you may have to watch the screen — horrified — through your fingers. STEVE GOW

Elijah Wood, right, and Jason Gann play man and man's best friend in quirky dark comedy Wilfred, returning for its second season on FX Canada.

Doggone Wilfred's back

This ain't ALF. Lead and co-creator discusses why the show works

2forcouples.com

In Wilfred (FX Canada), Ryan, a sad sack lawyer (Elijah Wood), strikes up a peculiar friendship with his neighbor's pooch. He sees Wilfred as a foulmouthed Australian in a shaggy dog suit while everyone else sees him as a cuddly mutt.

With the second season premiering on Thursday, we tossed Jason Gann, series co-creator and the man in the costume, some meaty bones to chew on.

What's the most cockamamie theory you've read on a message board from Wilfred fans?

People will get on there and go what is going on, is he this, is he dead, what's going on? Inevitably, a bunch of fans who've been on there for awhile will jump on and say you've just got to enjoy it, don't overanalyze it, don't over-think it, just go with it. I think people were driven crazy by the season one finale.

Wilfred and Ryan seem like an old married couple. What would a couples' counsellor make of their relationship?

You've obviously been in the writers' room. Look, I think it's a really good romance between the two. I guess you'd call it a co-dependent relationship that is maybe not healthy.

Despite all the trouble Wilfred gets Ryan into, do you think Ryan is ultimately better off having him in his life?

Definitely, because he's living. Part of life is making mistakes and getting out there into society because that's where he really struggles and those are the things that make you stronger and really define and make you who you are.

But, put it this way, would you like a friend like Wilfred?

No. Quite simply put. Fans are telling me all the time, I want a Wilfred and I'm like do you really? I'm not sure you do, you might have fun watching someone else have a Wilfred but it would be pretty wild. Maybe I could deal with it if it was for half an hour a week.

Wilfred's owner, Jenna, manipulates Ryan almost as much as the dog does. Is he in "puppy" love with her?

Ryan has a lot of stakes in a girl who isn't giving him a lot back romantically or as a friend really. We have to assume that a lot of it has happened off-screen. But yeah, it would be puppy love because it isn't really grounded in a truthful relationship, and they haven't developed one yet.

Have you ever been as whipped as Ryan?

Maybe for a week. Look, I've been heavily in love with girls but, from an early age, I saw what happened to nice guys. So even if I wanted to be like that, even if everything in my body was telling me to do so, I've resisted because they don't respect it ... well, they do and they don't. That doesn't mean I don't treat women well in my life. I really do. I treat them like queens.

Really?? Never even been a little whipped?

What am I saying, one of my last girlfriends used to send me to the dry cleaner all the time. I'd also drive her to work in the morning and she'd inevitably forget something and I'd have to drive her back. But it wasn't because I was desperately in love; this somehow just happened.

As manipulative and deceptive as Wilfred can get, he still manages to be endearing and loveable. What's his secret?

Well I don't pat myself on the back too often but that, I have to say, is a Jason Gann thing. My friends have always said that's just you in a dog suit. I have forever gotten away with saying things and doing things that people just generally don't. I've heard all my life, 'Jason if anybody else did that I would have thought he's the most disgusting creep, but for some reason when you do it it's okay.' I kinda bring that naughty cherub element to the character and it's something that's worked for me personally so it's fun to play with in the character.

Celebrity Olympians

From Hollywood royalty to actual royalty, some stars bring glamour to the Games. Here are our top six.

KIERON MONKS, METRO WORLD NEWS

Zara Phillips

Queen Elizabeth II's granddaughter Zara Phillips is to represent the British equestrian team at the London 2012 Olympics. This will be the 31-year-old Royal's first Olympics, despite a rich riding career that included gold medals at the 2005 European Eventing Championship.

Princess Anne

Zara's mother appeared at the 1976 Games, riding the Queen's horse Goodwill. Anne also won European medals and became even more famous by becoming the first Royal to appear on a TV quiz show, when she was a contestant on the BBC's A Question of Sport in 1987.

Greg Louganis

The finest diver of his generation, Louganis won gold medals at the 1984 and 1988 Games. He was then diagnosed with HIV and became a high-profile gay rights activist, campaigning against the U.S. army's Don't Ask, Don't Tell policy. He also wrote a best-selling autobiography and starred in a string of movies and TV shows.

Johnny Weissmuller

A U.S. swimmer who won gold at the 1924 and 1928 Olympics, Weissmuller went on to enjoy a successful acting career. The high point was a starring role in the official Tarzan films, for which he claimed to have invented the jungle character's trademark yell.

Sonja Henie

Norwegian figure skater and film star, Henie remains the most successful female skater in history with three Olympic gold medals between 1928-1936. She then signed with Fox studios as an actress and performer. Henie has her own star on Hollywood Boulevard, but was a controversial figure for her personal relationship with Adolf Hitler.

Muhammad Ali

Well before he became a global icon, Ali was an 18-year-old Cassius Clay from Louisville, Kentucky who bagged a gold medal as an amateur boxer at the 1960 Olympics. He would go on to convert to Islam, be one of the first social activists to protest against the Vietnam War, and become one of the greatest sporting athletes of the 20th century.

Kate peeps about her prince

Kate Middleton is usually pretty tight-lipped about life married to Prince William, but she did open up to a group of inner-city youth during a visit to their outdoor learning centre, according to Us Weekly. "William is very sweet and kind of spoils me," Middleton told one of the children. Of course, seeing Middleton working so well with children begs the question of when she and William will start a family of their own, and royal sources say sooner rather than later.

"There's a window in place," a source says, explaining that the couple is hoping to get pregnant between September and next summer. "The pregnancy will be announced. It won't be hidden."

Lindsay Lohan

Want to take a snooze under the strobe lights?

Lindsay Lohan must bounce back quickly. After being treated for exhaustion Friday — brought on by her hectic filming schedule — the troubled actress was out Saturday night partying at the Chateau Marmont, according to Us

Weekly. "For someone so exhausted, it was shocking to see her out past 1 a.m.," a source says. Lohan, who was reportedly still in hair and makeup from the Elizabeth Taylor biopic she's filming, stayed until hotel's restaurant cleared out for the night.

What seemed to be a relatively minor bar fight between Chris Brown and Drake last week is still brewing.

The Manhattan nightclub where the incident took place, W.i.P., has been closed down due to multiple code violations, according to the Associated Press.

As for the fight itself, a source tells the Associated Press that the two hip-hop stars weren't even involved in the bottle-throwing brawl, claiming it was "entourage versus entourage, never Drake versus Chris," shooting down the theory that the two were fighting over Rihanna.

Rapper Meek Mill — who was at the club with Drake, and was initially identified as an instigator — also says the stars weren't involved.

"Chris and Drake, them two was there, but it's other people that be around that take sh— to the next level," he tells MTV.com.

"Things just happen in the club. I seen girls in there throwing bottles. I never seen Chris Brown or Drake throw a bottle, and I was there."

While Brown has already talked to cops, Drake has declined to answer questions. "Why would he turn himself in when he did not commit any wrongdoing?" his rep told the New York Post in a statement on Sunday.

The only thing more annoying than a hip-hop fight is a never-ending non-hip-hop fight between entourages and publicists. This thing is one airborne bottle of Skinnygirl Margaritas away from being a Real Housewives episode.

Gomez goes wild on web, but that's where it ends

Selena Gomez's popular Fifty Shades of Grey spoof made for humour site Funny or Die is about as close as the former Disney star is going to get to the racy, mega-popular material, according to MTV News.

"I know I'm taking risks, but I don't think I could do that," Gomez says when asked about starring in the planned movie version of the book.

"That would be a little too much for me."

Cold virus holds promise as cancer therapy

Researchers have shown that a cold virus known to destroy cancer cells can be delivered to a tumour through the bloodstream without falling prey to killer antibodies on the way. In a study published Wednesday in the journal Science Translational Medicine, the researchers found the "reovirus" hitches a ride on blood cells and uses them as a shield against the immune-system cells. The reovirus holds promise as a possible new way of treating cancer because it not only kill cancer cells directly, but also triggers an immune response.

How a Victoria's Secret angel got her body back

Sexy in summer. We speak to personal trainer to Victoria's Secret "angel" Alessandra Ambrosio

MCGUINNESS
Metro World News

Having a baby is a life changing moment — sometimes not always for the best.

The lack of sleep, dirty diapers and the fact you've turned into a milk-making machine can be overwhelming. And however much some women would love to get their pre-baby body back, most have no idea how, or when it's OK to start exercising again. Leandro Carvalho tells us how to achieve post-baby body perfection.

Post-delivery recovery

"Women who give birth naturally need to wait around four weeks before they can start exercising again. The recovery period goes up to six weeks if they've had a caesarian," Carvalho tells Metro.

A serious operation, a caesarian limits the type and amount of working out that can be done months after giving birth. In other words, it'll be a while before you can run, jump, cycle or do squats,

Quoted

"Working out two hours a day, six days a week. On her 'off' day, she does gentle yoga."

Leandro Carvalho
Personal trainer to Victoria Secret Angel, Alessandra Ambrosio

lunges and sit-ups again.

But not all new moms can hope that newborn-related stress and breast-feeding alone will help them lose the baby weight.

For that reason, Carvalho found a way to increase heart rate and trigger weight loss with zero impact.

Here's how it goes:

Walk in incline

Start with the easiest exercise known to man: walking.

Carvalho advises you start off slow, maintaining a speed anywhere between two to 3.5 km/h on a five per cent incline (if on a treadmill). Never go faster than 4.0 km/h as this is basically running and no high impact exercise is allowed until at least two months after giving birth.

If your ultimate goal is to lose fat, you'll need to keep going for at least 30 minutes.

"Ten minutes on the treadmill is a good warm up. 20 minutes is good for your health but if you want to burn fat, you need to go beyond the 25 minute mark. Up until that point, your energy comes from the glycogen stored in the muscles, but after 25 minutes, your body gets its energy by burning fat," he adds.

Once you've walked in incline for a minimum of 25 minutes you can move on to the floor exercises.

The safest strategy: add some weight

Your workout intensity is limited and you'll need to be patient if you want results. You can't jump or run around, so challenge your body by wearing ankle weights and weighted gloves during your workouts.

"Adding light two to eight pound ankle weights when doing leg lifts (such as a kneeling leg lift) or weighted gloves when doing arm movements will increase the intensity of a move," explains Carvalho.

Slowly building up your resistance and the number reps will tone and sculpt your body. Start with 20 to 30 reps for each move, eventually working your way up to 100.

Advice

Time to change your approach

Hey Sisters, I was in a five-year relationship with a girl I met in university. We lived together and when the time came to pop the question I realized she wasn't the one for me. I've been single for a few months and have been going out with my friends to meet someone new. It's been fun, and I do talk to a lot of people, but no one has really captivated me. I'm starting to get fed up with looking, and I'm not sure what I'm missing. Any advice that doesn't involve eHarmony? Hungry for More

Andrea: Dear H4M, Being single after a long relationship with that not-quite-right-someone is like being released into the

TWO SISTERS
Andrea and Claire
Life@metronews.ca

woods to fend for yourself. There's a wonderful feeling of independence and everything is bright and exciting ... until you get hungry. You now have two options: a) die b) persevere. Chances are you're choosing the latter, so make better traps or forge better weapons. In other words, modify who you are and how you approach.

Maybe you haven't been ready to meet someone worthwhile and subconsciously aren't aligning yourself with this goal. Maybe to meet someone different, you have to be different. Imagine who you want to meet and the kind of person you see her with. Try to be that person, and let the universe do its thing, eHarmony not required.

Claire: Dear H4M, Newly single people who come out of long-term relationships think that the outside world is a big vending machine of available singles that will pop out the right one for them ... if they can just figure out which buttons to press. Nope. That's eHarmony. The older we get, the busier we get, the more baggage we amass, the more set in our ways we are.

It's harder to meet people. It may take time, and you will definitely get fed up. I have no better advice than to tell you to keep going, keep trying, and try to actually enjoy the freedom, the loneliness, and even the self-doubt. These are the ingredients to a more well-rounded man who is happy with himself. And there is nothing a woman likes more. Onwards.

Think you've had some bad dating experiences?

Reading. Chances are author Eddie Campbell has been through much worse

HEIDI PATALANO
Metro New York

The Car Squatter, the Gay Pirate, the Cross-Eyed Magician, the Sleeping Pill — are these characters all part of a bad Saturday Night Live sketch?

No. These are the nicknames that belong to some of the worst men author Eddie Campbell has ever dated. The Los Angeles native has had so many terrible and extreme experiences that he's recently compiled them into a book: 44 Horrible Dates. Campbell's hilarious look at dating in L.A. is rife with oddballs — from the guy who showed up to a date hopped up on cocaine to the one who wanted to use some groceries in the bedroom. Is Campbell a magnet for crazy? Given reader response to his memoirs, he doesn't think so.

"You can be the college-educated person, have a great life, love your family — all that stuff can be in place, and you can still meet a-holes," Campbell says.

"I know so many gorgeous, beautiful, smart women who keep just meeting d— after d— after d—."

But he says all those terrible dates have helped him avoid future disasters.

"It's a good lesson for everyone because when you're younger, you're a lot less judgmental about who you might go on a date with," says Campbell. "As you get older, and you're still single, you start breaking down what you're willing to put up with. It's not being overly picky, but it's knowing what's right for you."

Campbell stresses that one of the best ways to avoid the pitfalls he's experienced with, say, Nightmare on Vegan Street, is to take some time to evaluate your potential date before agreeing to spend time with them.

"Talk longer on the phone, get out a few questions," Campbell says. "I've actually been on dates where you're so bored you're thinking about separating your darks from your whites and what you're doing for the next day. Don't place yourself in that scenario."

Eddie Campbell recounts 44 cringe-worthy dates in his new book. iSTOCK

In a recent telephone conversation with an extended family member, there was a long drawn out discussion regarding a particular family event and what transpired during that event. We exchanged opinions, some of which caused disagreement on the perception of the event. In any case, voices were raised and then all of a sudden the line went dead. The other party hung up on me. I am now being asked to apologize for the things that I said and for my opinions, which apparently have caused "offence" to this person. I am not feeling the need to do so. How do I address this tactfully/diplomatically and or refuse to apologize?

Yours truly,
Ms. Diplomatic

Dear Ms. Diplomatic, What a dilemma! I guess my first question for you is how strongly do you feel about this issue and subject? If it really doesn't mean very much to you, then I would personally just apologize and let the entire situation close.

However, if you do feel very strongly, a few points: Firstly, it was very rude of the other person to hang up on you — that is something that should never be done. If you must hang the phone up in anger, then say so and put the phone down.

Here are your options for consideration:

1. Try calling and apologizing for the situation getting to where it is and try to finish the conversation, calmly explaining your point of view, but respecting theirs. It is OK for two people to agree to disagree.

2. Try sending an email or letter, again following the path above. However, I believe email leads to such a misinterpretation, so it's always easier to speak face to face.

3. Finally, as a last resort, go to a family member who is well respected by this other person and try to get them to help negotiate some peace between the two of you. Don't ask them to agree or plead your case, but just try to try and get the two of you talking and to explain that it is OK for you both to have different opinions, but that fighting is really not the answer. Please do let us know how things turn out, best of luck!

Snap Pea and Pork Belly Salad ($12). DAN CLAPSON

LUNCH RUSH
Dan Clapson
life@metronews.ca

I'm convinced that if a restaurant used my personality for inspiration, it would be like Taste.

The service here is always top notch and comes with a smile, a bit of wit and some sarcasm. I love this restaurant because a sense of humour is required before walking in the door!

Lately, I have been 'mysteriously' gaining weight, so I've been on a salad kick during the lunch hour.

After popping in this past week for lunch with a friend, I stuck to my newfound low-cal ways, ordering the Snap Pea and Pork Belly Salad ($12).

The fresh peas were tossed in a mint mojito dressing, topped with crispy pork belly and grana padano cheese.

It was, essentially, summer in a bowl and a party in my mouth. The sweet mint dressing was great in contrast to the salty pork belly.

If you haven't eaten here before, what's wrong with you?

An amusing comic strip recently showed a teenager asking his parents to lend (meaning give) him $20 so he could go out for a movie and pizza with his friends. His mother pointed out that he had a part-time job and savings in the bank. "But that's my money!" her son protested.

This seemingly innocent mess of the teenage years is spilling over into adulthood. One third of parents with a youngest child between 20 and 34 have at least one offspring living at home according to a 2011 Statistics Canada report. And one quarter of those enjoying Hotel Mom and Dad have left the nest only to return — the so-called boomerang kids.

It isn't surprising. After all, the Vanier Institute of the Family pegs the average debt for those with an undergraduate degree at around $18,000, but the Canadian Federation of Students believes it's more like $27,000.

Factor in the unemployment rate for the under-35 crowd, between 15 and 21 per cent, and there are a large number of young adults who have no financial choice but to live at home. In many cases, parents who are initially willing to help end up feeling put upon and resentful. Avoid this toxic situation by ensuring adult children at home contribute.

Above all, charge rent. I recommend a sliding scale based on income. First set a base rate no matter what your child is earning — $50 monthly is better than nothing.

Even if that means an engineering grad must take shifts at the mall or a fast food outlet, such financial obligations are the stuff of adulthood. (If your child is saving to go to school the rent can always be rebated later.)

Then peg future rent to a percentage of their earnings. A reasonable rule of thumb could be 20 to 25 per cent of gross income. Since most recent grads will have lots of tuition and education credits to carry forward, they are unlikely to pay much tax.

Also, be sure to spell out household duties such as cleaning, gardening, cooking and grocery shopping.

By all means help your kids get on their feet but treat them as adults at the same time.

Organic power shopping never pays off

FUN AND FRUGAL
Leslie Scorgie
money@metronews.ca
Twitter: @lesleyscorgie

Last week I was racing from a meeting with my lawyer to one with my banker, regarding my new home purchase. Between appointments, I decided to squeeze in a 'power shop' for groceries; in-and-out in less than eight minutes.

I filled my basket with a few days' worth of fresh organic foods and bolted to the checkout. The cashier rang in my $50 stash and that's when I discovered, in my haste, I'd left my wallet at my last appointment.

Full of apologies for the cashier and patrons waiting in line behind me, I started to leave the checkout counter. But, I was stopped by a nice guy from the lineup who insisted on paying for my groceries. I thanked him 10 times over, offered to pay him back (he refused), and his parting comments to me were "why do you buy organic? It's so expensive. I can get twice the amount of groceries for the same price." We all know the stats on organic foods; locally grown, fresh, greater nutrients because no artificial chemicals or additives are used in the growing and/or refining processes. Experts say these foods are better for our bodies and the environment. But, in many places, organic foods take up a significant chunk of a household's budget. Thus, many people opt for less healthy, inexpensive foods.

Coupon Cabin released a study last week about organic food purchasing behaviour. Nearly 75 per cent of respondents said they would buy organic if the price was more affordable. But, currently, less than half seek healthier food options because organics cost too much.

There are affordable ways to buy organic and eat healthy.

Plan ahead. Hasty purchases often result in bad deals. So, unlike my eight minute 'power shop', take time to plan out your organic purchases to ensure you don't buy items you don't need and avoid paying too much for the ones you do.

Buy less more often. Fresh organic produce provides its greatest flavour and nutritional benefits when consumed quickly. Buying fewer in-season produce items more often saves money as less food going rotten. If you're concerned about your carbon footprint each time you drive to the grocery store, stop driving and walk, run, bike, or take public transit. Coupon. Clip organic food coupons or search for them online. Coupons exist for almost any item. The key with couponing is to avoid going overboard – buying more than you need for the sake of a deal. Bulk-buy non-perishables. Take advantage of sales for non-perishables and items that can be frozen until you're ready to consume. Buy local. Not only will this help support local growers and businesses, in many circumstances, produce can be significantly less than at a traditional big-box grocer. Great organic healthy fresh foods are available at your local farmers' market or grocery co-op.

Test your green thumb. If you've got access to natural sunlight and have a yard or balcony, try growing your own herbs, fruits and veggies. Seed packs only cost a few dollars.

You don't have to fork over astronomical sums of money to buy organic.

Clemens acquitted after 'a hard five years'

MLB. Jury finds seven-time Cy Young winner didn't lie to U.S. Congress in 2008

Roger Clemens was acquitted Monday on all charges that he obstructed and lied to Congress in denying he used performance-enhancing drugs to build his career as one of the greatest pitchers in baseball history.

"I'm very thankful," Clemens said, choking up as he spoke after the verdict.

"It's been a hard five years," said the pitcher, who was retried after an earlier prosecution ended in a mistrial.

This trial was lengthy, but the deliberations were relatively brief. Jurors returned their verdict after close to 10 hours over several days. The outcome ended a 10-week trial that capped the U.S. government's investigation of the pitcher.

Emotional hugs among Clemens and family members followed the verdict, including one large group hug in the courtroom. At one point, wife Debbie Clemens dabbed his eyes with a tissue.

Outside, at one point, Clemens stopped to compose himself.

Accused of cheating to achieve and extend his success — and then facing felony charges that he lied about it — he declared, "I put a lot of hard work into that career."

He said he appreciated "my teammates who came in and the emails and phone calls" of support. With his four sons standing behind him, Clemens thanked his lawyers, his family, his sisters and his wife.

His chief lawyer, Rusty Hardin, walked up to a bank of microphones and exclaimed:

"Wow!"

Hardin said Clemens had to hustle to get to court in time to hear the verdict. "All of us had told Roger there wouldn't be a verdict for two, three or four days, so he was actually working out with his sons almost at the Washington Monument when he got the call that there was a verdict."

Clemens, 49, was charged with two counts of perjury, three counts of making false statements and one count of obstructing Congress when he testified at a deposition and at a nationally televised hearing in February 2008. The charges centred on his repeated denials that he used steroids and human growth hormone during a 24-year career that produced 354 wins.

On-court outburst costs Nalbandian

David Nalbandian was fined the maximum $12,560 US and placed under police investigation for assault after kicking an advertising board and injuring a line judge during the Queen's Club final.

The ATP confirmed the fine for unsportsmanlike conduct on Monday and said the Argentine player also was stripped of his 36,500 pounds ($57,350) in prize money.

London police said they were investigating a complaint of assault filed against Nalbandian, who was defaulted from Sunday's match against Marin Cilic in the grass-court Wimbledon warm-up event.

Heat avoiding finals letdowns so far

Dwyane Wade, LeBron James and Chris Bosh celebrate during the second half of their win over the Thunder on Sunday in Miami. MIKE EHREMAN/GETTY IMAGES

LeBron James, Dwyane Wade and Chris Bosh walked off the floor together after Game 3 of the NBA finals, and were immediately wrapped up in conversation as they strolled to the Miami Heat locker-room.

Their talk had nothing to do with a 91-85 win in Game 3.

Turns out, the Heat "Big Three" were already working on plans for Game 4 against the Oklahoma City Thunder by going over what had just happened while it was fresh in their minds. Television cameras captured them side-by-side on that walk, a far cry from the images of anguish after losing the finals last season.

The series resumes in Miami on Tuesday night, with the Heat holding a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven.

"We all got caught up in the lights and the negativity last year," Bosh said. "We let that take away our energy away from focusing on what we needed to focus on. This year we're just being ourselves. We're coming and competing. We're playing the best basketball and we're just having confidence in our game. We're good enough. We're good enough to win it. We were good enough last year. We just had too many letdowns."

Euro 2012. English keeping confidence in check

While England's European Championship expectations are rising, the unexpected early departures of the Netherlands and Russia have been enough to dampen any overconfidence for coach Roy Hodgson.

The Dutch followed their World Cup final appearance two years ago by losing all three Euro 2012 group stage matches. And Russia was ousted after losing to Greece on Saturday.

While England entered Euro 2012 at a low ebb, a draw against France and a victory over Sweden have given renewed belief about the team's prospects. Only a draw is needed against co-host Ukraine in the final match in Group D on Tuesday to reach the quarter-finals.

"There have been plenty of surprises already and we are not unaware that with expectations building up, we are not maybe underdogs in a game but we are starting to become the favourites," Hodgson said Monday. "But that doesn't change anything as far as we are concerned."

Euro 2012. Italy and Spain move past group stage with dramatic victories

Spain and Italy confirmed their heavyweight reputations at the European Championship on Monday, advancing to the quarter-finals after winning their final group matches.

Defending champion Spain sealed top spot in Group C by beating Croatia 1-0 with a late goal by substitute Jesus Navas. Croatia's football association faces a UEFA charge on Tuesday over its fans' racist abuse of Italy forward Mario Balotelli last week.

Balotelli came off the bench to score Italy's second goal in a 2-0 victory against Ireland, lifting the Azzurri above Croatia in the standings. Antonio Cassano had opened the scoring for the Azzurri.

Earlier, UEFA president Michel Platini said he was "not happy" with Croatia fans at Euro 2012.

Poland-based group to quarter-finals in Ukraine against either the co-host, England or France.

Spain will play on Saturday in Donetsk, and Italy goes to Kyiv on Sunday.

Elaborate Spanish possession play failed to create many scoring chances in Gdansk, despite the World Cup winners knowing a 1-0 loss would mean a ticket home.

Iker Casillas, the goalkeeper and captain, saved Spain with a double stop from Croatia's Ivan Rakitic in the 59th minute, then parried Ivan Perisic's low volley in the 79th.

Spain's passage was confirmed when Navas, who replaced Fernando Torres, struck in the 88th, tapping into an empty net from a pass by Andres Iniesta after the pair had broken the offside trap.

Italy knew that a 2-0 win would not be enough in Poznan if Spain and Croatia drew 1-1.

to score with a header from a 35th-minute corner, glancing in a header at the near post that had too much pace on it for goalkeeper Shay Given to keep out.

Ireland showed attacking intent after appearing overwhelmed in previous losses, but midfielder Keith Andrews was sent off for collecting a second yellow card in the 89th.

One minute later, Balotelli scored by hooking a volleyed shot over his left shoulder.

WEEKDAYS 5:30 AM

Horoscope

♈ Aries | March 21 - April 20.

You are not the sort to compromise your beliefs and opinions and that's good because you will be challenged in some way today.

♉ Taurus | April 21 - May 21.

Focus on relationships today and don't worry that you might miss out on a money-making opportunity.

♊ Gemini | May 22 - June 20.

If there is something about your everyday existence that you would like to change then now is the time to do something about it.

♋ Cancer | June 21 - July 22.

You seem to be more curious than usual about your place in the universe. Don't be scared of asking difficult questions: the answers you get will be hugely enlightening, and maybe more than a little bit profitable too.

♌ Leo | July 23 - Aug. 22. Don't back out of a promise today. If you let even one person down your reputation will suffer.

♍ Virgo | Aug. 23 - Sept. 22.

No matter how many times you have clashed with someone in the past they will be on your side today.

♎ Libra | Sept. 23 - Oct. 22.

You will become aware today that someone has been keeping things from you, but don't get upset or annoyed about it.

♏ Scorpio | Oct. 23 - Nov. 21.

Something that never made much sense before will start to make sense today. A lot of questions that did not seem to have answers will somehow resolve themselves and you'll marvel at just how simple it all is.

♐ Sagittarius | Nov. 22 - Dec. 21.

There is an art to saying unpleasant things while making them sound reasonable, even helpful, and if you master that art today you will get a lot of things done.

♑ Capricorn | Dec. 22 - Jan 20.

Be kind to yourself for a change: do something fun and relaxing.

♒ Aquarius | Jan. 21 - Feb 18.

You are right and those who disagree with you are wrong. That's the attitude you will adopt today and in getting things done it will take you far.

♓ Pisces | Feb. 19 - March 20.

You won't see eye-to-eye with someone you work or do business with today but you don't have to go to war about it.
